INTRODUCTION

On February 3rd, 1922, a letter from Mrs. Emma Mahelona Wilcox was read to the Board of Trustees of the Kaua'i Public Library Association, Limited, in which she offered to give $75,000 for the erection of a county free library in memory of her husband, Albert Spencer Wilcox. In October of that year, Hart Wood, one of Hawaii's foremost architects, was selected to design the building, which was officially dedicated on May 24, 1924.

In April, 1954, a museum committee was named with Juliet Rice Wichman as the chairman and Dora Jane Cole a member. Kenneth Roehrig was selected as architect. The association of Mrs. Wichman and Mrs. Cole in raising the necessary funds for the new building led to complete involvement of both. On December 3, 1960, the Kaua'i Museum was officially opened with Mrs. Wichman as Director and Mrs. Cole as Manager.

When in 1969, the Wilcox library was returned to the association, plans were made to incorporate it into the museum complex. Under Geoffrey Fairfax's guidance, the building was renovated and re-opened in December, 1970. (Known as the Albert Spencer Wilcox Building) it is an integral part of the museum complex and offers ethnic heritage and art exhibits. The original museum, now known as the William Hyde Rice Building, contains the permanent exhibit, THE STORY OF KAUA'I.
